MATTER TO INVESTIGATE

Message:

Decubitus ulcers, otherwise known as pressure ulcers or bedsores, are injuries to the skin and underlying tissue usually over bony prominences as a result of prolonged pressure to the affected area. One of the most common sites of decubitus ulcer formation is over the sacral area. Malnutrition has been linked as a predisposing risk factor for the development of decubitus ulcers. However, the relationship between the degree of malnutrition and the stage of sacral decubitus ulcers has not been well established.
